Another Victim of the Accident to the Ingalis. The divers who were engaged yesterday morning in examining the damages to the United States transport Ingalls, which was floated in an Eric Basin dry dock on the previous day, discovered the body of a drowned man pinned under the rubbish at the bottom of the dock. It was removed at the bottom of the dock. It was removed to the morgue to await identification. The man was probably one of the Italian laborers engaged in shifting ballast. He is about 40 years old, 5 feet 7½ inches high and had on a dark coat, blue trousers and cotton shirt. General Manager Dickie of the dry dock expects that the Ingalls will be ready to go into commission again within three weeks.
